Thoughts on the Synod of the Catholic Church- Fr Sean McNulty SSC Synod.ie

The Synod that Pope Francis has called is a forum for listening to everybody's experience of discipleship with compassion and tenderness.

In his promotion of the processes for Synodality, Pope Francis talks about walking together, listening to each other, and listening to the Holy Spirit speaking through other people.

More recently the new Archbishop of Tuam, Francis Duffy, said at his installation last January that Synodality "... is a pathway, a journey accompanied by a great variety of people.

We will continue listening, discerning and planning as we walk together and with the Holy Spirit; I see no alternative."

This commitment gives hope because it implies an equality of persons, and it is based on a successful process, the one described in Chapter 15 of the Acts of the Apostles, where issues about how to accept non-Jewish Christians were settled by listening to experience, discerning the presence of the Holy Spirit, and coming to a consensus for change. The consensus is presented as "the Holy Spirit and we have decided..."

Decisions are about courses of action and the kind of decisions to be expected of a Synod are about changing the institution.

We are familiar with the struggle involved in changing our personal lives and how difficult it is to come to the self-knowledge needed to put our lives in order, to leave behind the baggage that clutters and obstructs us, to overcome whatever is making us less human, whether that comes from outside us or inside us.

The infallibility of the Church means that while we can be confident of the truths about God, life and love as revealed principally in the life, ministry, death and resurrection of Jesus, and expressed for example in the Apostles' Creed or the longer Nicene Creed, our understanding of these realities can always be improved.

There is no infallible wisdom about our decisions on how to live our lives in accordance with them. Over the last two thousand years there has been great progress in our understanding of what it means to be a disciple and myriad decisions on how to go about it.

However, as well as often failing to live up to our good decisions, we also have a history of failing to translate past understandings into the different idioms of different cultures, with the inevitable result of inadequate decisions for Christian living.

Archbishop Francis Duffy also said on the day of his installation that "[Synodality] isn't always easy, it can be challenging and it can be energising. The Holy Spirit is present and who knows where that combination of listening, walking together and prayer and discerning will lead?"
